THE Editors desire to thank all those friends of Sewanee who have so liberally assisted, by contributions and otherwise, in the preparation of the present volume of the CAP AND GOWN; and especially do they desire to express their appreciation of the services rendered by the REVEREND ARTHUR HOWARD NOLL, whose artistic discernment and unfailing interest have made him of inestimable value in supervising this publication. The splendid mechanical equipment of The University Press has made possible its typographical appearance, which speaks for itself.

Breslin Tower, Wisminster Chimes

The Breslin Bells

A near, a far, Oh Breslin Bells,
Ring out your notes across the mountain,
Across the fells
And through the dells,
Emotion telling
As if were welling
From out your knelling
Pure sweetness from some soulful fountain.

A near, a far, ring on, ring on,
With notes that toll the end of Time,
The night and morn
Likewise to scorn,
As in your pealing
Forever stealing
Its heartfelt feeling,
That speaks without a thought in every chime.

Late Chancellor Dudley

T WAS not only the Chancellor of the University of the South, but one of the warmest friends the University ever had, who was lost when, on the twenty-second of January, 1904, the Rt. Rev. THOMAS UNDERWOOD DUDLEY, D.D., LL.D., D.C.

L., Second Bishop of Kentucky, died.

Bishop Dudley, from the beginning of his Episcopate, identified himself with the fortunes of Sewanee, and was the means, in 1885, of bringing his diocese into union with the University. He became, in 1893, its sixth Chancellor in the succession—its first by election. His influence procured for it the largest single gift of endowment it has thus far received. He was the wise, loving and faithful friend of every officer of the University who by time or opportunity attained to the privilege of his intimate acquaintance. His great heart and quick sympathy, combined with matchless wit and eloquence, attached to him the love and admiration of the entire student-body, and the CAP AND GOWN hails this first opportunity to pay this tribute of affection to his memory.

Chancellor Capers

AD the student-body voted when a choice was made, in 1904, for a Chancellor of the University of the South, in succession to the late Rt. Rev. Dr. Dudley, it is doubtful upon whom the choice would have fallen. But the student-body has been unanimous in its endorsement of the vote which made the Rt. Rev. ELLISON CAPERS, D.D., Bishop of South Carolina, the seventh Chancellor of the University of the South.

As a teacher; as a gallant military commander, fearless and intrepid; as a man of public affairs; and, finally, as a preacher and teacher of God's Holy Word, Chancellor Capers has inspired men to follow where he has led the way. He comes of distinguished parentage. His people were among the first who settled in South Carolina, and his father was a saintly and noble Bishop of the Methodist Church. The Chancellor bore the rank of Brigadier General in the Confederate Army, and was twice severely wounded during the War. After the close of the war, he was made Secretary of South Carolina, and resigned this position to become a captain in the army of the living God.

If we should say wherein the greatness of our Chancellor lies, it would be his humility. "Humble as a little child," he is great in the nearness to his Master, who taught that humility is the first requisite of the true Christian. Such is our Chancellor. May he long be with; and may his manly hand long be at the helm, is the prayer of us all.

T. LUKE'S! May the years pass lightly over the old citadel of mother mountain's faith and tradition. Men may come and they surely go, but the old rookery flaunts her time-stained front with equal fidelity and glory. The storks come not here to perch, but nevertheless here is the nursery of the staunch and distinctive first born of Sewanee—traditions boast, to-day's possession—the "Spirit of the Mountain."

In halcyon days what has not St. Luke's been and done? What now her degree? Her heroes of class-room and of rostrum, of gridiron and diamond have left behind indestructible golden germs which float like fairy motes about their haunts of bygone years and germinate the inspiration to do and to achieve. That other baneful and carnivorous little reptilia have likewise been left in the wake of our heroes is only a painful and nocturnal application of the law of compensation.

Is it calico or class-room, cupboard or clap-trap, comedy or colic? No matter, here's a theolog who is easily first in whatever field. His sphere of influence embraces the baby carriage and the bottle, athletics and cosmetics, dogmatics and the drama.

Would you have piquant stories? Here's tonsured

Father Noll, ever plethoric with unflagging humour; would you have "The Face on the Bar Room Floor?" here's Durrant with his trim waist line and flute-like voice; would you watch the silken-winged butterfly netted of a summer's day? here's Don Juan Meade, or Brunos Brown, that incorrigible optimist of amorous bent; even Ticknor might answer your purpose, the vagrant, fragrant Tick, ever wooing the visionary fair in concealing clouds of Duke's Mixture. What of the heroes of yesterday? Stars of by-gone days loom large with an added lustre, but has not our day had its Phillips, he of widely bruited prowess and renown and yet withal a man of easy blushes? And Wheat was lately ours—that elongated, elevated, merry-pated minstrel mime beyond compare!

Has not the past vomited forth J. B., etc., Cannon and Ed Johnson, returned like Rip Van Winkle after leaving in far gone years? Shall they, like that senile tippler's boast, "not count?" Poynor, old reliable, tho' a shocking fast Jennie when playing on end; Hubbard of classical countenance and bent; Huske and Johnson, full of alloy if silence be golden; Adonis Gordon (here's to him); Lumpkin, of speech ornate and flowery; Goodman, portly brewer of sleep-slaughtering coffee; McCloud, the brown-eyed cherub; Sherwood Clark; Noë, slave of the lamp; George Spinoza, Huxley Myers, the philosopher of Corinth, and adjacent parts, boast of Dr. Bishop's Kindergarten, of Prof. Gray's Apologizers;—these be ours! The noble Roman lady has no monopoly of jewels. What if some of ours be paste or flecked or grotesquely carven? None the less are they ours. Some at least are sound in churchmanship, for we scale the whole gamut from Titan-high to pigmy-low:

High Church, Broad Church, Prot and Rit,
Some are rusty, some frost-bit,
Some are husky, some do nit,
But all are dodging the deep black pit.

And St. Luke's marches with the times. Behold organization at work within her scarred walls! Since history was last writ of her a blooming Woman's Auxiliary has budded into being with the following sock-darners as officials: President, Miss Sal Hastings; Vice-Presidents, Misses Jennie Poynor, Lizzie Johnson, Hannah Watts, Adelaide Andrews; Visiting Chaplain, Willie Ex-Harvardo Neiler, B.A.

To write thus of old St. Luke's and of the men she claims would be but execrable taste did the writer not hold certain the conviction that the past few years have been among the very best in the life of the department,—that perhaps they have been the best. Never has "The Doctor" been more himself and ours. The anchored sweetness of his life and the serene beauty of his silvered years shall always be our possession and his benediction. The era which this skit wrestles to commemorate should be marked with a white stone. It has been marked by hard work, honest effort and a gracious freedom. Faculty, theolog, and postulant have "pulled together," and this is the foreword we leave behind.

Law Department

Law Department

IN many ways, the Law School is the most distinctive department in the University. It is the smallest—in numbers—the most conspicuous in athletics, is about the average in scholastic attainments, and far surpasses all others in department spirit. No other department has a club such as the Law Club, which is at once democratic and comprehensive. It would be manifestly impossible for another branch of the University to have such an organization; for if Theological, it would be a prayer-meeting; if Medical, someone would get poisoned; if Academic, it would resolve itself either into a debating society or a farce.

Some person with more originality than mental attainment has called us "driftwood." For the benefit of some reader who may not see the application of this obnoxious term, I will explain that the cognomen suggests that the members of the Law Class have drifted from other departments because they sought an easier method to obtain a degree. Wait, you Academ, or Theolog, or embryonic physician. Wait until you get into trouble.

Sometime in the dim and distant future when you have stolen a horse or assaulted a Bishop, you will come around to our office and beg us on bended knee to get you off. Then will sweet revenge be ours. You have heard of a retaining fee? Before we open our mouths to pour forth wisdom we will transfer all your ready cash to our professional pockets. We will make you mortgage your home and pay us for drawing up the mortgage; and before you have done with us you will be sucked as dry as a moth when it is cast from a spider's web.

You must come to us. The whole world must come to us because the world is full of trouble and trouble is our specialty. We, as barristers, will do all we can to alleviate trouble (for a suitable fee), but until people become superhuman our services will be in demand. You, kind reader, will do well to memorize the Law Department roll, and if, at any time, you are sued or wish to bring an action against your neighbor, or your neighbor's wife, or man-servant, or maid servant, etc., etc., why, call on us (and bring your check book).

Thompson Hall. Medical Department

The Medical Department~

Medical Department

THE history of the Medical Department has been that of growth. From its very inception it has filled an important place in the economy of the University. Numerically it is the largest of all the departments. Nor is this its only claim to distinction. It is far and away, the department of study. Within the shadows of Thompson Hall the Sons of Aesculapius seek a deeper knowledge of the healing art. They rise with the lark and lights may be seen in the Medical Building far into the night. They know no rest. Their very dreams by night are bloody. To their slumbering eyes, mangled limbs, dead bodies, bistouries, scalpels, bandages, erythrocytes and polymorpho-nucleus neutrophils are constantly present.

Thus it is that the medical student, constantly buried in work, finds but little time to devote to the more engaging sides of university life. But the fact that he does not enter into the fullness of this life, is by no means a sign that he does not take an interest in them. In fact, while outwardly he scoffs at the studied negligence of the academic student, making fun of his cap and gown; the truth is, that in his secret heart of hearts, buried side by side with his love for Gray's Anatomy, is a sneaking desire to do the same thing.

And lo! this desire is gratified. For on Commencement Day the Meds, innocent and unsuspecting, are summoned to come and clothe themselves in garments, which "cling like cerements," in gowns of learning and robes of dignity. And thus it is that yearly the poor Medical Department is roped out and robed into Chapel to sit through their dreary hour while certificates, diplomas and degrees are being bandied from mouth to mouth in a foreign tongue.

This was not the case at the last Commencement. Warned by experience of the tortures that awaited them, the Meds took no cognizance of the official dictum to appear at Chapel in academic costume and instead, hied to the woods to circumnavigate with the ticks and red bugs. Witness the wrath of B. L. W. when he sees the woful want of Meds. Straightway comes a harsh reprimand and the Meds are much frightened. They promise to err no more and are reinstated in the good graces of the Father of the Healing Art, Dr. John S. Cain.

I have said that the Meds outwardly scoff at the other Sewanee students. This is not altogether true. For there are men in the Medical Department who have set the pace at Sewanee. You will look long in the Academic Department to find athletes of recent years who can compare with LeMoyne, Rupert Colmore, Lee and Ephraim Kirby-Smith, and Powe. In the famous games of 1902 against Vanderbilt, no less than four of the members of the team were from the Medical Department.

The social side of medical life is not wholly ignored. Let the unwary summer girl betake herself to the Supply Store some Saturday night about 8 o'clock and she may see a procession of white robed spirits, headed by a devil in red whose insignia is the skull and bones. She will see them snatch from the crowd, the fated student, blindfold him and cast him in chains. He is the newest initiate of the Alpha Kappa Kappa, Medical Fraternity. This forms one of the pleasantest sides of professional life; and membership at Sewanee, since there is but one fraternity, is considered a prized honor.

And thus it is the Meds spend their time. They work much and play little. They watch eagerly and off times, in vain, for Dr. West to fill his lecture hour when that excellent little surgeon is marooned on some country road with his minature automobile. Upon some afternoons they may be seen trooping to the hospital to witness a clinic, trudging in the hot sun, climbing the long hills, filled with perspiration and desire to see and smell the gore of the operating room. But it is worth while in the end. Those men who go out from our Medical Department and who have taken their full work here, do as much credit to Sewanee as any of the vaunted Theologs. They have as much Sewanee spirit and are just as much Sewanee men as he who enters the Academic Department and sports himself on University Avenue for a few short summers and is seen no more forever.

Let us hope that we may have more students who come to Sewanee for their full four years and less who come here for one session, and who rarely bring credit to Sewanee.

Let the other students of the University extend the hand of fellowship to the medical student and let us all work for the upbuilding of Sewanee.

Hoffman Hall, and St. Luke's Hall

Academic

Department

Academic Department

HE newly arrived Academic student, after he has proved the authenticity of his prep-school certificates, or successfully passed the entrance exams, and after he has duly matriculated and appeared before that august and awe-inspiring body, the Schedule Committee, finds himself a member of the most important and prominent department of the University.

He is viewed with some interest and no little amusement by those fortunate enough to call themselves "old men." His first few days, and incidentally nights, are apt to be passed in a somewhat anxious and nervous state, during which time he says little and writes many letters. Gradually, however, the "rat" accustoms himself to his environment. He learns the "popular" names of the various members of the Faculty with avidity, within a week he knows every score of the '99 team, has learned the yell and discusses the outlook for the coming football season with fair intelligence.

A month later we scarcely recognize him. The anxious and meek look has disappeared entirely and he swaggers down University Avenue with his trousers rolled up and a pipe in his mouth and looks wise when some one mentions Kilpatrick or "Ditty" Seibels. He has joined a fraternity and wears a big bejeweled pin on the left side of his coat. Indeed he is, or thinks he is, a typical college man, an Academ, if you please, and he wishes it to be known.

He studies, as he is supposed to do—at times; goes to Chapel and classes with a fair degree of regularity,—when his skips have all been used,—and in general takes a philosophical view of life.

His leisure time is divided about equally between making calls, the Crow's Nest and his Chapter House. The summer girls he believes to have been created solely for his amusement and he passes judgement on them without the least thought of the impression he creates. It can be, he thinks, nothing unless favorable and he feels confident of his powers as a lady-killer.

The Supply Store and Chapter Houses are his natural loafing places. The former he regards as a carefully planned system of extortion whereby he is separated from his spare cash in exchange for "cokes" and other equally dangerous concoctions. The latter furnishes the scene for many a tete-tete with the girl of his choice and is frequented day and night.

The time passes swiftly; term follows term and at the end of the second year we find the sometime "rat," if his effort in his classes have satisfied the exacting professors and he has obtained the required twenty-four points, a Gownsmen. He wears a mortar-board cap and flowing black gown, is privileged to carry a cane, exempt from gym, and best of all has twenty-four Chapel skips.

He is now all dignity and importance and looks scornfully upon the childish pastimes of the under-classmen whom he dubs Juniors, and whom he often seriously thinks would be materially improved by a judicious application of the "paternal paddle" [à la J. B. H]. He joins the Senior German Club, takes up Anglo and Logic and the degree, once a vague, unattainable sort of thing begins to assume more definite outlines. He discusses the poetry of Browning and the philosophy of Kant and speaks knowingly of various other matters too weighty for the minds of the less advanced Juniors.

Such then is the evolution of the typical Academ. There are, of course, those who do not conform to this type. There are some who prudently save their skips until the end of the term, who abjure Supply Store drinks and fight shy of the summer girls. These few devote themselves assiduously to their books and are the joy and delight of the Faculty and the wonder of their less provident friends. There are others, whose number is larger, who step beyond the bounds usually observed by the average Academ and who appear regularly before the Dean for any or all of a number of offenses. However, the Academ usually combines the two extremes in a happy mean and enjoys his college life to the utmost.

To those who do not know them the Academics may appear distant and reserved, but to their friends they are jolly good fellows. At times they are prone to consider themselves oppressed by the Faculty whose decrees are received in silent rage and whose personnel furnishes them the object of many jokes and far-fetched puns.

The denizens of Hoffman view the Theologs, solemn inhabitants of St. Luke's, with a slight amusement and a good deal of suspicion. "The Department" is a good thing, in a way, and in its place, and those of its members who are their friends and fraternity-mates, they delight to shock with an occasional "damn" or with dark hints of nights spent in wild revelry at or on the road from Bubbling Spring.

The Academ's feeling toward the Law students is one of some little envy and never amusement. Optional Chapel is alone a thing to be respected and the Law Department is looked upon as a sort of refuge in time of trouble; a place to be entered when one is way over in Chapel or classes or has failed to pass the requisites number of studies.

The Medical Department is to the Academ an unknown quantity; an enigma as it were. Some of the Meds, he will tell you, are all right; but others,—and here a shrug of the shoulders express his ignorance of the majority of the men under discussion.

The opinion held by Junior and Gownsmen alike of themselves and their department is an exalted one. Indeed they have a right to such an opinion. From their department for the most part come the men who compose 'Varsity teams, who go out to represent the University in debate and whose courtesy, susceptibility and dancing make Sewanee such a delightful resort for the gentle summer maiden. They are the ones who preserve and hand down the traditions and ideals of the place. In all University activities they are the most prominent and indeed they represent the pick of the first families, not only of the South, but of our great country. They are varied, to be sure, but they are also select to the last degree.

Visitors may think it "so nice" to be a Theolog; they may be impressed with the size of the books of the Law student and his assumed air of learning, and they may marvel at the number of the Meds, but the Academs go their way with a calm unperturbed air. They realize their superiority, if others do not, and realizing it they are apt at times to speak rather slightly of the other departments.

However, when the time comes for the 'Varsity to meet rival colleges, the air of condescension is lost. It is the the best man for the place, be he Lawyer, Med, Theolog or whatnot. Department distinctions are forgotten and the Academ enthusiastically beats his Theolog neighbor on the back as a touchdown is scored and is beaten in turn by the Lawyer on his other side. They are no longer members of other departments, but Sewanee men. Their voices unite in giving the good old 'Varsity yell and their hearts are inseparably welded together by their common hope,—the welfare of Sewanee.

Grammar School

THE Sewanee Grammar School mirrors the history of the University of the South. Its fat years have been those of the corporation; its lean (now happily past) were those when the fat were devoured, in more senses than one.

Beginning with fourteen student in 1868, the S. G. S. boys and the University students recited together in the staple subjects; and even when they did not meet together, the same class rooms served for both in turn. The first of these class rooms were the two now used as choir room and vestry room for the Chapel.

The whole tone of those days was of a splendid Spartan simplicity, and military ideals of courtesy and courage prevailed. No matter how trite the statement that those were the days of Sewanee's plain living and high thinking, we should never grow tired of it. There was then no such distinctive office as that of Head Master. General Gorgas, Vice-Chancellor, was also Head Master. Nor was there any special staff of Grammar School Masters. The Professors of the University held night study halls, and wrestled with the hopefuls of the S. G. S. in the mysteries of amo, amas, amat, and the pons asinorum, and τύπτω, and, in their hours of relaxation from such strenuous tasks, guided the feet of wise Sophomores and reverend Seniors. "Uncle Bob"—bless his dear old soul!—what has he not done, and been, in Sewanee's career? He deserves a whole volume on himself! "Uncle Bob" was what they called "Assistant Master," and presided over study halls and sent the victims to the individual Professors. He was then young and vigorous; and we may be assured that he did not dole out correction with the parsimony he has of late years used in the apportionment of "allowances."

Boys of both departments also lived together in the big "Halls," supervised by proctors, or not supervised, as might depend on the ability and conscientiousness of the individual proctor. He might be beguiled into being away calling, or when something was happening, might be stricken deaf, dumb, and blind. Then was the opportunity for a "rough house," long to be spoken of, lasting till the skillfully posted sentinels brought word that the authorities were on the march. The latter worthies would find a most suspicious atmosphere of study; and would be besought to explain intricate problems, or to translate knotty passages in Cicero or Xenophon.

Then, too, were the times which saw so unanimous and enthusiastic a use of the rod as would have gladdened the hearts of King Solomon and the puissant Dr. Busby. Let the present student who "grouches" over this or that action of his Faculty, get Marcus started on the "licking" of those good old days. He will hear of al fresco scenes to put to shame Mr. Ben Greet's. Verily things were not "As You Like It," or "Much Ado About Nothing," nor yet "Love's Labor's Lost," when Colonel Sevier, with his log and stout hickories, was busy amid Sewanee's sylvan shades.

This Golden Age, then, we may put roughly, from 1868

to 1876, and we may pause to note that the numbers ran from 14 to 137. In the latter year, Mr. (now Bishop) Charles M. Beckwith was elected as the first distinctive Head Master; and to him was assigned the first corps of Grammar School Masters. In 1879, Mr. (now Bishop) Davis Sessums (the S. G. S. is the Rugby of the South in furnishing Head Masters for the Episcopate), Mr. Davis Sessums devoted himself to the Head Mastership with that superb loyalty of his to all that pertains to Sewanee. Those were the dark days of Sewanee's finances; and we should never, in our prosperity, forget Bishop Sessums' complete self-abnegation and brave labors.

From 1881 to 1889, Mr. John W. Weber was the idolized Head Master. He was thoroughly imbued with Sewanee ideals, and was the finest flower of Southern birth and training. Few men have so influenced boys for all that is noble and high. In many respects, he was an American Arnold of Rugby. His administration is signalized by the fact that, under him, Mr. Wiggins and Mr. Nauts first tried their 'prentice hand at teaching. Under Mr. Weber's devotion and ability, the S. G. S. steadily increased in numbers from 65 to 151, its high water mark until Dr. Roszel's incumbency.

Under Mr. Weber, two very important changes were instituted. The Grammar School boys were separated from the University students, and assigned to "Halls" of their own. This was about the year 1886. These Halls—Miss Porcher's, (called "Magnolia Hall"), Mrs. Elmore's, Mrs. Egleston's (later Mrs. R. B. Lees') were used exclusively for Grammar School boys until 1894, when they were all gathered into the old building, which was before that a hotel, and has now reverted to its original use, as "The Sewanee Inn."

The other change was the transference of the military system from the University students to the boys of the Sewanee Grammar School.

With Mr. W. H. McKellar, who was most energetic and popular, in spite of his disciplinary abilities, the number, in 1898, touched 100, and has never since gone below that figure.

Mr. Junius E. Leigh, the scholarly and retiring Virginian, 1899-1900; Henry G. Seibels, B.A., 1901-1903 (the mighty "Ditty" whose very name carried terror to Sewanee's foes on every field for four glorious years); and Dr. Brantz M. Roszel (1903—), probably the ablest administrator, and the best equipped man in knowledge of school methods that has ever filled the post—these three gentlemen complete the list of incumbents of this, the most important office on the Mountain next after the Vice-Chancellor's.

Mr. Siebel's administration was signalized by the move, in March, 1902, into the magnificent Dormitory, the Quintard Memorial. The increase in numbers under Dr. Roszel's administration has been phenomenal. From Mr. McKellar's 100, the school has gone to 216, the last figures for 1906.

In the annals of nations, we hardly care more than for one of Dr. Conger's soda-water checks for lists and dates of kings. We want to know about the people, and how they lived. The life of the average boy—all this certainly deserves a fairer show at the hands of the chronicler than to be packed off here in a few lines. The personalities of the Head Master and his teachers, from year to year and from one school generation to another; the zealous and studious attention paid by every boy, from the Senior Captain to the newest "Rat," to the foibles and weaknesses of the Masters, and their unerring discernment of the same; the jokes, the jibes, the nicknames, the constant play of bright and joyous minds and lives upon each other; the dances in old Forensic (disappearing now before the advancing Dawn of Progress); the games, the victories, the defeats; the debates and declamations and the yearly passing up to the University of class after class, whence the "Big Tigers" shall draw for battles royal with Vandy; the ebbing and flowing tides of hazing; of late years, the foot-ball suppers most happily initiated by Dr. Roszel, where S. G. S. enthusiasm flows richly and teachers and boys speak and sing, and the feast is graced by Dr. Wiggins, or Dr. DuBose, or Captain McNeal—all these are surely subjects for a historian's pen. As I write, removed hundred of miles from the Mother Mountain, I feel my heart grow mellow as I think of the varied pleasures of the S. G. S. And, as I look back on five years of service there, memory calls up a host of figures, grand and gay, all bathed in "the light that never was on sea or land."

The S. G. S. has, for nearly forty years, sent her sons forth into the South. Many of them have conferred lustre on their Alma Mater; most are reflecting credit on her in their daily walks of life. She has a future that should fill them, and all her lovers, with hope and cheer, for she is entering on a greater part in the training of the men of the South. No one who knows the pluck and loyalty of her boys can doubt for one moment that she will worthily fulfill her high mission in the years that are to come.

A Tribute to Sewanee

MIDWAY between that hour which saw her birth
And that completed circle of a hundred years
Which hastening Time will add in future days,
Sewanee stands. Her form, unshaken and untried,
Strengthened by the enduring conflict with the years,
Grounds Faith and Hope in that Eternal Name
Which ageless as the ages, gave to men
Whose hearts and hopes and lives were centered here
The inspiration for their mighty deed.

THE hour of benediction. On revered saints,
On hoary heads, on manhood's sweetest bloom,
With this last time of looking back
Upon the decades past, the blessing falls.
Peace, from the ivied hall and heavenward pointing spire.
Peace, from the crannied tower and cloistered cool retreat.
Peace, from each memory laden scene of old.
Peace, from thy mother to her worthy sons.

THE day is done. On campus, hall and tower
The seal of night is set. Tomorrow's sun Brings in the dawn of that new day for which
All those who are Sewanee's sons rejoice.
A day of hopes new-born, of plans new-cast;
A day of struggles new, of victories won;
A day of salutations, aspirations, hopes, joys, fears;
A day of seeking for the hand of fame
Which, beckoning through the years shall spur us on Sewanee's mission truly to achieve. So when
The circlet of a century shall crown her brow
She may rest worthy of her meed of praise.

ATOWERED city. On thy revered head,
Made hoary by the trials of the years,
Made holy by the faith of those who guided thee,
Let rest that peace, which from Sewanee's sons,
In one glad tumult of rejoicing praise
Is given thee on this thy natal day.

All Saints' Chapel

The Old and the New Chapel

F we are to understand by a Chapel a place consecrated by faith and set apart to the worship of Almighty God, we must anticipate the erection of St. Augustine's Chapel by two years, and ask our reader to go with us to the spot on which St. Luke's oratory now stands and try to picture in his imagination a certain historic event which was enacted there on the 22nd day of March, 1866. It was on that day, of blessed memory, that Bishop Quintard with three others, the Rev. Dr. Merrick, the Rev. Thomas A. Morris and Major George R. Fairbanks refounded the University of the South. They first erected a rude wooden cross, said the Creed, sang the Gloria in Excelsis, offered a prayer to God and declared that they had come to revive the important work of Christian education, so auspiciously begun in 1860 by the great founders of the University. Was ever college or university renewed and reborn under such unique and romantic circumstances! To have projected a university before the war in 1857, was by no means a Utopian undertaking. To formulate such a plan now in the midst of this new and rising wave of industrial progress and prosperity with which the South is blessed, would not seem either quixotic or impracticable, but to have founded, or refounded, a university in 1866, when the South was prostrate and impoverished, this was indeed leading a forlorn hope against overwhelming odds. Such audacity of faith was magnificent! It was more. It was sublime!

So, if one is to write a history of the University Chapel, he must begin with that first "House of God," which had for its vaulted roof the over-arching blue of heaven; for its nave the Gothic arches of over-hanging trees and leafy boughs, and for its pulpit, sanctuary and altar the outstretched arms of a great wooden cross, beneath which that little company of faithful pioneers stood, with the "Man of God" in their midst and lifted up voices in song and in prayer that God would bless this new beginning of the University of the South.

St. Augustine's Chapel

Two years later saw the erection of St. Augustine's Chapel, which was the first academic building put up on the domain and which served for a time the double purpose of a schoolroom and a place of worship. The nave of this original chapel measured 32×24 feet and the chancel, 12×16 feet. It has since been enlarged nine different times to meet the growing needs of the University. It has been elongated at both ends like a telescope and its sides have been enlarged and extended like a Bedouin's tent. Its first close connection with the work of the classroom, it has never quite lost. Some of us remember that for many years, what is now the north transept, was once a classroom in which Dr. DuBose taught Moral Science and in what is now the south transept, General Kirby-Smith taught Mathematics. Indeed, the very name St. Augustine was not suggested by the distinguished services and ability of the great bishop of Hippo, but by Bishop Quintard's visit to St. Augustine's school for boys at Canterbury, when he went over to England in 1867 to raise funds for the University. Thus, both by its name and its early use and associations, it has ever been most closely allied and identified with the academic life of Sewanee.

It would not be too much to claim for the University Chapel, that it touches more sides of the student life and gathers under its roof more varied interests, religious and otherwise, than any other building on the Mountain. In the Chapel the corporate life of the University is expressed more completely than it is anywhere else. There students come to hear the various notices effecting every phase of student life given out by the proctors. It is there that the student who has been honored by election to one of the most select and secret of all student organizations is duly escorted down the aisle and out of the north door. It is in the Chapel that the Dean of the Academic Department announces the names of those who have been given their gowns, and the names of those who are eligible to join the fraternities. It is here that all mass meetings, all games, all contests are announced. Those who stay away from Chapel soon get out of touch with what is going on and lose something out of their college life which is not strictly covered by the word "religious," but which has a very close and vital connection with it. Religion is very broad and comprehensive at Sewanee. It is made to include "every good and perfect gift," and the student who attends St. Augustine's Chapel is made to feel that every legitimate pleasure and interest that concerns his life may be brought into vital relation with the Chapel, and whatever notice or meeting cannot be mentioned there has not upon it the blessing of God and should be debarred anywhere.

Dear Old Chapel! How we shall miss thy old benches and thy draughty doors when we bid thee adieu to take our abode in the new and more churchly and splendid "All Saints." What hallowed memories are thine! It was there we gathered in the early morn to break the Body of our Lord and to renew our strength with manna from on High. It is at the Chapel font that all the dear Sewanee babies are brought to be baptized. It is before the altar that our Alumni come to claim our sweetest and best Sewanee girls. It is from her doors that our sainted dead are carried forth, and it is at her Chancel steps that we kneel to receive our degrees and to hear the Vice-Chancellor's valète and the Valedictorian's Farewell Address. Like the "Chambered Nautilus," we may outgrow our first and our present spiritual abode, but we will never cease to love the Old Chapel. It has a charm which is all its own. No service of dedication is needed to hallow its walls. It has been hallowed indeed and made infinitely precious in our eyes by all the deepest joys and all the most splendid visions that make life worth living.

Turning our faces to the future for a moment, we could ask no better endowment for our new Chapel, which we hope soon to occupy, than that it may take over as a priceless heritage all that made the old so dear to us. As we look upon the walls of the new All Saints' rising higher day by day, the thought is borne in upon us with irresistible force, that Sewanee has entered upon a new era in her development. It is well that we should call the new Chapel "All Saints," because all future progress must come not by repudiation or forgetfulness of the past, but by grateful and heartfelt recognition of the splendid faith and services of those who have gone before. We are building upon the foundations our fathers laid. We are building with the same faith and with the same ideas which inspired them. We are building not for time, but for eternity. Let us build worthily and grandly as befits so good a cause and so splendid and glorious a destiny.

The Chelidon

HELIDON ! The very name savors of Demosthenes, Socrates or some other learned Grecian sage. οἱ τῶν ἐκλεκτῶν ἐκλεκτοί its members have been dubbed, and when Chelidonian meets Chelidonian, then 'tis a war of wit and word. Gigantic intellects strive each with other, and wrestle for supremacy. Questions which Legislative assemblies, Parliaments and Congresses quail at and attack with fear and trembling are met and settled irrevocably with the ease and calmness which befits the men of Chelidon. There, had you answered the eternal question, would you hear flights of oratory never dreamed of under less fortunate auspices, niceties of English never imagined by the builders of the language.

Yet do not imagine for one instant that Chelidon can do naught but talk. It is true that there has been for years, the final court of appeal. When Chancellor, Vice-Chancellor, and learned Trustees, hooded, capped and gowned, have failed to find an answer to momentous questions, Chelidon has taken the matter in hand, and all deliberations must needs be at an end. Then, when the gavel lies silent, and drowsy curatores from the council pass, and seek cessation from the weary round of words, words, words ; when Breslin peals the silent midnight watch, around the festive board gather the Chelidonians, whose brows erstwhile were knit in frowning intellectuality, and wit and jollity reign supreme. What matters it if governmental heads stir uneasily when chorus of laughter or song reach their unwilling ears. 'Tis Chelidon, and Chelidon must be supreme. 'Tis not the feast makes Chelidon, but Chelidon who makes the feast. Mirth and humor and human sympathy embrace all, and Chelidonians of days ago, forget their years and gather in one band of fellowship and youth.

And well has Chelidon filled her part in Sewanee's life. To her training can her sons point as fitting them for encounters of after life. Their logic, their rhetoric, their intellect invincible, like chaff before the wind, argumentative opponents are swept away. Indeed, the rumor is that Chelidonians can convince a man that what they told him wasn't so ! Back to her modest assemblies points the hand of many a votary at the Mountain shrine. From bench and bar and pulpit and platform the voices with one accord salute the Chelidon.

The Sewanee Missionary Society

AMONG the various phases of student activity on the Mountain, not least in interest and importance is the work carried on by students of the Theological Department in maintaining regular religious services during the nine months of the academic year at various mission churches and places of worship in the vicinity of Sewanee. Of these missions there are no less than ten—St. Agnes, Cowan; St. Paul's, Sewanee (for the colored people); Epiphany, Sherwood; St. James, Lost Cove; Our Saviour, Jump Off (two missions); the Coal-mont Mission; Calvary, Roark's Cove; and the mission at Battle Creek. It should also be stated that one of the "theologues" conducts a service each Sunday afternoon at St. Mary's-on-the-Mountain, the Industrial School for Girls which is maintained by the Sisters of St. Mary. Besides this, students assist as lay readers in the Otey Memorial Church, Sewanee, and in Christ Church, Tracy City, and fill the place of officers and teachers in the various Sunday Schools connected with the above churches and missions. It will be seen at once that these facts indicate a work of considerable proportions, which will fairly rank as among the most important branches of student life and activity. The Rev. F. M. Osborne in The Spirit of Missions for July, 1904, says:

"The Sewanee Missionary finds his work right at his door. He plunges into the thick woods and secluded "coves" and recesses of the mountains, and finds them peopled with thousands of men, women and children of the same type as those found farther east in Tennessee and the mountains of North Carolina and Virginia. . . . They are of unmixed blood, and for the most part of Scotch-Irish ancestry." This missionary work may be called in a true sense a work of "University extension." Under our local conditions, it is the nearest approach that is possible to University Settlement work. It plays an important part in bringing something of the life and stimulus of a Christian college community within the somewhat cramped and narrow existence of the Tennessee mountaineer. And the reflex influence of this friendly human intercourse upon the students themselves who take part in it is of no less importance. We in our university life may not flatter ourselves that we are beyond or above the danger of narrow and one-sided modes of thinking and ways of living. Our danger, perhaps equally with that of the secluded mountaineer, though in a different way, is the peril and the mischief of an unduly self-centered existence. We need to realize and appreciate that not only "beyond," but within "the mountains there are people."

The Church —

Called to Heal!

By The Rev. James K. Taylor

Now, above all times in history, The Church is called on in its healing and reconciling role in our world. Rather than add to the noise and chaos all around us, our Lord stands, stilling tempests so that we may hear a small voice of calm direction.

No great moral decisions have ever been arrived at by screaming or shooting or rioting. Decisions are made in order and reflection, and Christian moral decisions are very needful of quiet time and patience to let our inward ears hear the voice of Authority. Don't add to the noise. Care. Feel. Listen. Pray. Work through the legitimate channels of society for change. Look at the world in its pain and brokenness — and see if you can find anybody able to cope with its need.

Human chaos demands God's order, HIS love. Where there is hatred, let us sow love — not shove either down somebody's throat.

"The Peace of God, it is no peace,

But strife closed in the sod.

Yet, Brothers, pray for but one thing— The Marvelous peace of God."

Hymn 437

Not Far

By The Rev. Terence J. Finlay, D.D.

You cannot be a Christian in a nice, cozy little compartment—shut off from the world. You cannot have a glow of spirituality in Church and then lose it when you are outside in the everyday routine business of living. Jesus had His troubles with "good Church-people." Do you recall when one of the Scribes came up to Him one day and asked, "Which is the first of all the Commandments?" The Scribe was probably trying to trap Jesus in some legality of the Mosaic Law. Jesus replied, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy mind. This is the first and greatest Commandment and the second is like unto it: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." And the Scribe said, "Master, Thou has truly said, for there is no God but the One and there is none other than He and to love Him and to love his neighbor as himself is more than all burnt offerings and sacrifices." What did Jesus say to him? He said, "Verily I say unto you, thou are not far from the Kingdom." That must have come as a shock to the Scribe. He felt himself to be a part of the Kingdom. What was Jesus trying to tell this man? He surely was trying to show him that it was not enough to know the Law, to know the first Commandment; it had to be practiced, translated into action, carried outside the Temple courts.

There are a great many Christians today who are not far from the Kingdom, but that is not good enough. Jesus does not want people who are "not far," if they are just "near," or "almost." God is never satisfied with "very." We are either honest or dishonest, true or false, for or against. We are either in the Kingdom or out of the Kingdom. I know this is rather radical preaching because today we are supposed to compromise. Jesus never compromised with evil. We cannot be almost "good," "righteous," or "forgiven"!

As a poet sees it

The Episcopal Church in America seems to have gone stark raving mad. We had extraordinary good fortune in the fact that our Book of Common Prayer was composed at exactly the right historical moment. The English language had already become more or less what it is today, so that the Prayer Book is no more difficult to follow than Shakespeare. But the ecclesiastics of the sixteenth century still possessed a feeling for the ritual and ceremonial which today we have almost entirely lost. Why should we spit on our luck?

—W. H. Auden

OVER-EMPHASIS ON THE SENSES

Here's Help for the Clergy

"The Day" is a loyal Curate, helping you reach your "Look-and-Run" readers, your Church officials and members who need more instruction, your confirmation candidates, and your shut-ins.

And college students, young men in the Armed Forces, and others of your Parish away from home will thank God for your interest, if you send each a copy of "The Day" each month, with or without a personal note.

Do let us help you help others! Order a bundle of copies today!

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH DAY

M. S. WHALEY

The success of my ruse gave me confidence. I proceeded gaily, firm in the belief that I could bring my mission to a successful issue.

I reached my rendezvous without further mishap. As soon as I perceived the garden wall to which Alvarez directed me, I understood why he said "six paces to the right," for directly over the garden door hung a lamp which would have made concealment impossible. I had several minutes to wait which seemed ages to my impatient, wrought-up imagination.

At last the door latch clicked and cautiously swung open. A cloaked figure glided through and sprang within the shadow to my side.

"Alvarez!" the woman whispered.

"Señorita," I began. At the first word she recoiled and clasped her hands upon her breast.

"Who are you?" she demanded fearfully.

She had stepped back into the circle of light in her fright, allowing me to see her clearly. I was totally unprepared for such beauty and yet disappointed to see that the girl was a pronounced blond. Her blue eyes were wide with startled excitement, her breast rising and falling quickly.

"Señorita," I explained, "Alvarez is watched and cannot come. He bade me deliver this paper to you."

The girl recovered her composure instantly and took the extended envelope.

"Quick," she said, "come into the garden with me while I read it."

She opened the door and as we slipped through, closed it quickly and shot the bolt. Then, standing beneath the lamp (which was hung above the door in such a way that it threw its rays on both sides) she tore open the envelope and quickly gathered its contents. She muttered a smothered exclamation and holding her handkerchief to her face shook in uncontrollable emotion. I started forward in alarm, but she extended a restraining hand and gasped:

"No, no! I'm all right now; you must help me, however; but wait! have you the pass word?"

She watched me with suspicious eyes.

"Ferdinand!" I cried.

"Isabella!" she answered. "It is all right then, I can trust you."

"Now we must act quickly," she continued, "I am going to test your fortitude, sir."

The girl paused and glanced back at the house which loomed big and sombre in the starlight. The window on the first floor alone showed a light, she gazed upon it reflectively and then bade me follow her.

We threaded our way between heavy rows of shrubbery and reached the driveway. We stepped to the grassy side to avoid any betraying crunch of our shoes upon the gravel; and halted beneath a massive porte-cochère.

"Now," she said, speaking excitedly, "I shall ask you to enter the house and proceed directly to the study. It is lighted, but there is no one within. You must take a seat by the fire, with your back to the door and promise me not to say a word, no matter what happens, for fully five minutes. Then if you wish you may tell anything you choose in explanation of your presence in the house. And now one thing more; are you armed?"

Again that uncomfortable question.

"No," I replied. "Is there any danger for me in this affair?"

"Not necessarily," she answered. "Are you afraid? Perhaps it is too much to ask."

I could not resist the appealing eyes so dimly visible, nor could I help resenting the implied slur upon my courage.

"Madam," I assured her, "I am only too willing to be of service to you in any way."

She turned away in silence for a moment and seemed to hesitate—then she turned to me with outstretched hand.

"You are a brave, honest gentleman, sir. I shall always remember the service of this night. Go, now, and I pray that you come to no harm."

I pressed the little hand in both of mine.

"I shall ever be ready to do any service—."

"For the cause of Panama?" she whispered.

"For the cause of Panama!" I echoed with a sigh, and turned into the house.

I had no difficulty in finding the study. It was an inviting looking room, with low ceiling, oak panelled, but relieved from gloom by judiciously arranged pictures and draperies. The open fire place lent cheer as well as warmth, and the big Morris chair before it, was designed for comfort. I pulled the chair around and sat down with my back to the door and awaited developments.

There was not a sound in the house and certainly nothing in this peaceful room to suggest danger. My excitement of the moment before passed off and I began to realize the audacity of my position. What was I to do if the owner of the house appeared before my five minutes ordeal was up? I'm philosopher enough to make the best of things, so I placed my hat upon the writing table, my feet upon the fender, and feeling the craving for tobacco, lit a cigar.

The situation was ridiculous in the extreme. I wondered what idea the girl could have in placing me in it. From that I passed on to wondering who the girl might be, and to a host of similar conjectures. She was undoubtedly a pretty girl and evidently of the upper class. But what reason could she have for mixing in Spanish-American politics?

My musings were interrupted rather abruptly. I had heard no sound of footsteps, but a cold incisive voice behind me made me aware of the fact that I was not alone.

"I'll be hanged if you are not cool, sir!"

I turned slowly in my chair and looked down the muzzle of a revolver. It was a large sized weapon, I noticed, and was held remarkably steady. I must confess that the shock was so severe that several seconds elapsed before I could raise my eyes to the face behind it and recognized Senator Brownden who is universally known in Boston. My surprise was so complete that I came near forgetting my promise to the fair conspirator. However, I remembered in time and refrained from opening my mouth. I turned back to the fire again and blew rings of smoke at the mantel-piece. There was a gasp of indignant amazement behind me and then language unfit to repeat. The Senator sprang in front of me, and this time the revolver was shaking in an alarming manner.

"You must be unaware, sir," he sputtered, "that I can shoot you down like a dog. What are you doing in my study at this hour?"

I took out my watch in great perturbation of mind. The Senator looked angry enough to pull the trigger if I remained silent much longer. To my relief I saw that I might open my lips in another half minute. My unwilling host had grown white with rage and his eyes had steadied into a dangerous coldness. He also drew his watch and when next he spoke it was with a quiet determination not to be mistaken.

"I shall give you exactly ten seconds in which to answer me. Who are you and what do you mean by this intrusion? If you do not answer me I shall kill you as sure as you are sitting there—One —"

I felt my hair rise. I knew enough of Senator Brown-den to feel certain that he would keep his promise.

"Two." My eyes followed the creeping minute hand. There were still twenty seconds of silence before me.

"Nine." The eyes followed the sights until the muzzle of the revolver covered my head.

"Hold on! for Heavens sake let me explain," I burst out.

The pistol was lowered and the Senator surveyed me coldly.

"Go ahead," he said curtly.

As clearly as possible under the circumstance, I recounted the events of the evening, omitting of course the names of all concerned. The Senator listened with growing interest. In the midst of my narrative there arose a bustle and commotion in some far part of the mansion. Doors slammed and the sound of raised voices and hurrying footsteps echoed along the hallway. The Senator went to the door and listened. His eyes had grown suspicious and I noted that he was covering me with his revolver once more. The noise died down, however, almost as quickly as it had begun.

"What in thunder do you suppose that was?" he demanded.

I assured him that I was at a loss for an explanation. He still stood at the open doorway, his brow puckered into a puzzled frown. The next instant a woman's voice harsh and strident screamed out the word "Stella!" Some one was rushing along the hall toward us; and again that agonizing call froze our blood:

"Stella! Stella!"

The Senator staggered against the door white and trembling. The revolver fell from his limp hand to the floor and lay unheeded.

Then a woman, all disheveled, with grief stricken face, threw herself upon the Senator's breast and sobbed out:

"Stella! Stella is gone!"

At that moment a frightened servant thrust his head in the doorway and stammered out:

"I, I found this just now, Sir, on the drive way."

I recognized the packet I had given the girl only half an hour before. The Senator seized it and withdrew the contents eagerly. As he read, his face flushed and the swollen veins on his forehead stood out in purple knots.

"Read that, you infernal fool, you!" He burst out, throwing the paper at my feet. "Your Panama patriot is that rascal Alvarez—a penniless tutor in the Fashion School. He's been trying to elope with my daughter, Stella, for a month."

In mortification I stooped for the paper and read it with flushing face.

MI CARA MAI:

Your father has had me closely watched by detectives for over a week. I cannot meet you as I promised; but Cupid has shown us the way.

The romantic young idiot who will deliver this has taken it into his head that I am mixed up in the Panama-Colombia affair. I have been careful not to undeceive him. I have given him a pass word "Ferdinand," and you are to answer "Isabella." Keep up the game and plan to have him keep your father busy while we get out of the way.

Carter and Van Dorner will put the detective on to this fellow Smith and leave me undisturbed. Meet me at the front gate; I'll arrange the rest.

In haste,

Yours,

ALVAREZ.

Winter

Kind mother earth has garnished all
The foliage to her breast,
Whose tint was like unto the gold
Of sunset in the west.

The harvest-moon has passed away,
And with her all the feast
That autumn brought to be the store
Of man, and bird, and beast.

And biting winds of Winter's reign
Now whistle o'er the manes,
And pierce the traveller to the core
Just like so many lances.

Behold the snow upon the vine
Like fleece, with tender hand,
Out-spread to catch the beaming darts
From yonder zenith-land,

And drives the mocker to his nest
Within the holly leaves,
And sparrow to her hiding place
That's cramped beneath the eaves.

Alas! the world doth seem so bare,
When bleakness chills the hour,
And what was once a fragrant dell
No longer blows a flower.

The year is drawing to its close,
And, oft as I remember,
The fitting fancies of the Spring
Return to cheer December.

The Greek Play

SEWANEE'S uniqueness among American colleges is largely due to the fact that the manners and the academic ideals of the institution were, in many things, modeled upon the English universities—especially Oxford. Therefore it has always been her pride that the cultural value of a clean-cut and clear-sighted Hellenism has been preciously stressed on this free mountain top.

Greek plays have been given here every little while in past years with solid success—among them, the "Antigone," the "Oedipus Rex," etc. In 1905, for the first time in America, the "Frogs" of Aristophanes was presented and met with an enthusiastic reception from students and visitors alike. The "Frogs," now and today, is brimming over with genuine burlesque. If it were not taking liberties with the shades of antiquity, it might be said to be reeking with uproarious farce.

Wilkie Memminger—he of mossy Sewanee stage-craft—coached the actors; and Mr. Jervev, of the Greek Department, was choregus. The Chorus sang the Parry music with distinction and appreciation, numbering among themselves the gusty basso of Mr. Nauts, and the troubadour tenor of Dr. Sioussat, as well as the rice field echo of Huger and the burbling baritone of Coryphaeus Lumpkin.

Stuart Maclean was a most convincing Dionysos—no Kentucky Colonel could have drawn a more artistic cork. Xanthias' legs were represented by Earl Wheat with that art that escapes detection. The "Giant-Guard-of-the-South" Phillips was more ponderous than any Herakles; and Curd was so realistic a dead-man that the Grammar-School, in anticipation of a funeral, cried "Holiday." Dr. Montgomery ferried the dead with the skill of a Captain Hank Haft, while Holmes did Aiakos with the soulfulness of the most fashionable head-waiter in New York. Paul Jones was as gracious to look upon as his namesake is to trickle down. But the hit of the evening was Ticknor as the Stygian Shrew, the landlady of the "eating-joint" in Hell. Gaither seconded him well. Durrant's Aischylos runs neck and neck with his "Face upon the Bar-room Floor," and Ford Fuller's Plouton had the blackness of midnight bound about it.

From this it is entirely clear that the "Frogs" made good, and whoever wants further information can interview anyone who saw it.

The Ballade of Hoffman Boarding House

(With no apologies)

'Twas Fultah Hoffman's boarding house,
Where Junior-folk reside,
And there were men from all the States,
And Mexicans beside,
And peevishly they sat and smoked
And fearsomely they lied.

They lied about the General,
Who gave them scanty bread;
About the diningroom beneath,
The bedrooms overhead;
For they had looked too often on
Black "cokes" when they were red.

They told their tales of gristly stake,
Unharm'd by axe or sword;
They attacked their toughest biscuits
With the brimstone of the Lord,
And chicken legs, with teeth-prints, flew
Across the fist-banged board.

A shrieking from the Proctors and
The waiters on the stairs,
A crash of dishes on the floor,
A tackle unawares,
And Lem came down, as halfbacks drop,
Across the broken chairs.

And there was Lem, the baseball coach,
Bull-throated, strong of arm,
Who carried in his waistcoat pocket
A fiercely cherished charm—
The snowy little soda-mint
That keeps a man from harm.

And there was Sejk, the athlete,
And Pope, the married man,
And Stripling Stone, and Lyne o' Type,
And others of the clan;
They raged and sobbed and yearned for food
As only Juniors can.

Now Screbe, the Wonder, shared their fast—
All Nashville knew his fame—
From Austin, down in Texas,
To Sewanee he came
To eat the meals at Hoffman,
and learn Dyspepsia's name.

Thus slew they Lem, the baseball coach,
Bull-throated, strong of arm;
But Mrs Preston looted first
The fiercely guarded charm—
The little snowy soda-mint
That keeps a man from harm

But Juniors learn what Seniors know,
And the Coach has found out since,
That desperate dyspeptics pay
No heed to threats nor hints,
And Screbe, the Wonder, rolled his eyes
On Bailey's soda-mints.

But tight was Lem, the baseball coach,
Bull-throated, strong of arm;
And he refused to yield it up—
His fiercely cherished charm;
He needed all his soda-mints
To keep him soothed and calm.

When Screbe, the Wonder, takes revenge,
All ill betide the man;
He dropped back for a punt, and kicked
As only Screbo can;
A scream of rage—"He snatched me dope!"
And so the fray began.

The History of Sewanee Dramatics

SO FAR back as the year, 1882, we can get a comparatively accurate account of the various theatrical entertainments given by the students. But before that date, we have to rely upon the memories of "oldest inhabitants"—a most unscientific procedure. Let us then divide our sketch into pre-historic and historic times. In the pre-historic times, there was presented, I am told, in the month of October, 1875, some Tableaux. This is the earliest histrionic event which I can discover. What these Tableaux were, where given and what for, all of these facts remain as nebulous as the Eleusinian mysteries. A more definite word can be said for the play given in the Spring of 1878. It was named "An Evening Call," and seems to have given much entertainment to the then sojourners in this wilderness.

We now come to historic times and discover that 1882 was a momentous year; for the stage, not the present one, in Forensic was then completed, and on it, on the 21st of September was given that delightful farce, which still remains a standard for amateurs, " Ici on parle Français." Details of this important event can be found in the CAP AND GOWN of 1882.

Now let it be clearly understood, that we are not here dealing with concerts, but with plays pure and simple—at least we hope they were. Of Glee Club performances there seems to have been an abundance in the pre-historic days, but of plays, I cannot find out for certain any besides those mentioned. We should then begin our historical statement with this one of 1882.

In the year of grace, 1886, early in the month of July, "dodgers" on all conspicuous trees and posts announced that "the Original Sewanee Dramatic Club will produce John Tobin's unrivalled comedy, 'The Honeymoon.' Admission, 50 cents; reserved seats, 25 cents, extra."

This "unrivalled" comedy was given on the 10th, and seems to have brought in considerable money "for the benefit of Forensic." The correspondent, writing to the Nashville American, reported that it had been "received rapturously," and that the scenery was prodigious in its realism. Among the actors we note Mr. Thompson, Mr. Peters, Miss Wicks, Miss Egleston and Mr. A. Boucher. Of this last named gentleman, requiescat in pace, we should pause to say a few words—He was the creator of the Sewanee enthusiasm for theatricals. From all sides, we hear of "Gus" Boucher, as having been the life and the instigator of the Dramatic Club. In the history of this subject his name predominates. He should be acclaimed the patron saint of Punch and Judy.

1886 was a busy year, for another, and more pretentious performance was given on the 28th of October, when according to the bill poster's statements, "the good people of these parts" were called upon "to admire art, applaud virtue, sympathize with lovers, and condole with a hen-pecked husband," and to see as emblematic of all these, the "beautiful and pathetically comic play of Esmeralda." For the benefit of Forensic again—among those named in the programme were Messrs. Beall, Coyle, W. B. Hall, Butt, Spratt, and Peters, assisted by the Misses B. Kirby-Smith, Wicks, McVea and C. Kirby-Smith.

The next note we find is quite amusing. We read in the Nashville American, the following communication from Tullahoma, dated February 3, 1887: "The Sewanee Opera Company (!) played here to-night to a fair sized audience. The acting was excellent and reflects great credit to the troupe. They play at Shelbyville to-morrow night." Does not that sound strange? just as if a gang of professional track walkers were doing a series of one-night stands through the State. The play was "Among the Breakers," and the facts are as follows: Certain enthusiasts spent the winter vacation on the Mountain, and to beguile the time got up this play; but there being nothing but the hogs up here for an audience at that time of year they went in partes infidelium, into the highways and compelled men to come in. Whether they got out alive financially, or not, the chronicles do not enlighten us. By special request, this same play was repeated for the benefit of the CAP AND GOWN after the reassembling of the clans on April 16, 1887. And so it is appropriate that this grandchild of the CAP AND GOWN should have in it a record of one of the benefactors of its ancestors. We note among the actors almost the same list as that of the previous play, save the addition of E. D. Smith, whose name should be mentioned, as it figures quite prominently in the dramatics of the next few years.

It was, apparently in 1887, that there arose a clamor in the camp, demanding a new Forensic—mutatis mutandis

—how familiar this sounds! It seems that originally Forensic consisted of the present building, minus the stage, and whenever anything was given a temporary proscenium had to be built; a big nuisance in itself, not considering the way in which it reduced the hall's seating capacity. And so a new building was desired, and one of those ever-failing benefactors was sought, but he eluded his pursuers. However, several shows were given, concerts and such like, for the benefit of the new building during 1887, mostly under the management of Mrs. S. K. Johnson. Of this lady we must say a few words: Upon her fell Mr. Boucher's mantle, and to her untiring energy and ability Sewanee owes most of its Thespian revelries between 1887 and 1901. And more, unless my information is incorrect, she was the moving spirit in erecting the present stage of Forensic. This remark upon the building of a new Forensic is especially interesting to us to-day, now that the once new building has finished its course and is to be gathered to its fathers. Pause for a moment and shed a tear with me over that grand old shack! May its memory ever be green, and when we are inflated with affluence and reclining in the fauteuils of a fire proof Forensic, may we ever look back with smiling memory to that romantic wreck of the past. As far as we can ascertain, the present Thespians are hoarding their treasures in order to be able to assist in the erection of a new building.

Without doubt the greatest performance ever witnessed so far in Forensic, was the production of the "Mikado" on the 12th and 13th of August, 1887. Let the "dodger" and the programme tell the tale:

"For a New Hall, given by the Dramatic Club, 'The

Traditional Ideals of Sewanee

I AM asked to say in ten minutes somewhat of the traditional ideals of this University. I will try to put the matter in just five words, with a brief explanation of each. I have sometimes spoken of the makers and the making of Sewanee. And by Sewanee I mean not its genus but its differentia, not Sewanee as a school, or a University, or a community,—but this school, university, or community, in its individual distinction from all others in the world. Who hath made thee to differ? or, Wherein consists thy difference?—those are the questions I want to answer. I do not pretend or presume to say that the differences I am going to select to specify are all of them very actual, or as yet actualized, among us; but whatever we, the actual, are, they are the distinctions that Sewanee, the ideal, means and stands for. My sketch will therefore, probably be partly historical and actual, and partly ideal and anticipatory.

The first differentiation or distinction that Sewanee did actually or historically win for itself and largely stand for, was a very outward and visible one of what we might dignify with the term style—in fact, mostly a matter of clothes. In those earliest days of Grammar School ascendancy or monopoly people used to ask us about the Dude Factory we had up here on the mountain. Now greater men than I have said greater things than I can say about clothes. But even I have always thought some good things about clothes too, and when I was at my University I tried to be the right kind of a dude myself. I have been too bothered and forgetful to keep it up since, but I take a secret pride in our student body to this day as a body of well dressed young men. I admire the Sewanee style—a style too innate and natural to degenerate into foppishness or dudishness, and quite able on proper occasion to rise into elegance. I have sometimes said that Sewanee owed this first distinction to a happy succession of Paris tailors at the very start. But the tailors are no longer here, and the thing is. Another account of it is that Sewanee draws its patronage from the social class of old-time gentlemen, rather more than most schools. However it be, the thing I mean is a good thing, and I think it is an historical and an actual thing among us.

The second distinction won by Sewanee in the early days, and I hope not since lost, may nevertheless be illustrated by a remark that you hear—perhaps not you but I—once in a while, generally from the dear old ladies who recall the consulship of Plaucus: “Sewanee has not the politeness that used so to distinguish it.” It was something more and better than mere politeness; it was good-breeding and courtesy. And it used to show itself more than now for two reasons. The first is that we were all then one big family, and lived in private houses together and knew and cared more for one another. The second reason, I have always said, was Gen. Gorgas. He moulded the primitive Grammar School which was the mother of us all. He had the spirit and the power of the truest and severest military courtesy. He taught us not only theoretically but practically to touch or take off our caps to our officers, our elders, all ladies, and to all strangers or visitors as token of welcome and hospitality. People noticed it, and felt warmed and flattered by the welcome, and went away and spoke of it. Whatever else Sewanee does, they said, it certainly does make gentlemen. And they sent their sons here to be made gentlemen of. What I have called our style and our courtesy were our card, before we had many more in the pack. For the making of Sewanee in some other ways was a slower business. That old courtesy took root too deep, I hope, to be ever capable of dying out. There are more of us, we know less of one another, conditions are necessarily changed. We need to remind ourselves of it. A good heart, and good manners, are better even than good clothes.

And there is something better than good manners. It is good man, or good manhood; although our Second Founder used to say so constantly to us, "Manners maketh man." If anyone wants to know more of what I mean by true manhood, he will have to come to my Moral Science Class where we study all the types and ideals of it, from classical to Christian, and discuss in detail what "it were" to be a man.

But there is one thing about manhood that I want to define. I want to distinguish it not so much from its absence or its contradictories as from what we may call its accidents or its applications. I have the most perfect respect for the laboring man or the tradesman, as well as for the professional man or the business man of any good kind or degree. Indeed I do not think much of a man without some such adjunct. But it is the man and not the adjunct that is the essential, the infinite and eternal thing. We might, and will perhaps more and more, allow men to learn here their professions or even their several businesses, but I do think that the great and high idea and ideal of Sewanee is to be more concerned about the men than about the trades—or the professional or business men. I think we ought to strive hard to hold fast the main aim of a general or universal human culture. We ought to labour to qualify ourselves to fill and occupy that higher leisure which according to the ancients follows labour and in which life is truly lived.

A famous old military man, who was also a great educator, a long time Superintendent of West Point, and afterwards himself a founder of a great school and eventually a University, used to say that a man and a gentleman showed himself conspicuously by his bearing in three places: the parade-ground, the ball-room, and in Church. The parade-ground I suppose stood with him for the spirit and discipline and control of physical manhood; the ball-room for social culture and good manners; the Church for the crown and dignity of all truest manhood; respect and reverence for that which is higher than ourselves, that which is highest in Itself.

Sewanee then I say, in its history, in its aim, and I hope somewhat in its attainment, stands for these five things—appearance, manners, manhood, culture, reverence.

Breslin Tower Westminster Chimes

LORD, thro' this hour
be Thou my guide
For in Thy power
I do confide.

Song of the Tower

LORD, through this hour
Lead me, I pray;
When death doth lower
Save me for aye.

BE THOU my guide,
And lead me where
Thou dost decide,
Is all my prayer.

FOR in Thy power
The world doth lay;
As in a tower
I fain would stay.

I DO confide
In Thy great care;
And there abide
Thy love to share.

SAVE me for aye
Is all my prayer;
I fain would stay
Thy love to share.

St. Luke's Hall

the delightful "oh" of the summer girl as a good play was made. He saw the supply store, "Doc's," the chapter house, and the views, and his heart yearned for the old scenes.

As the night fell he turned his horse toward the camp, and reaching there, silently dismounted and walked over to the fire. "Here's some mail for you, Babe," said the cook, as he held out several letters and a small paper. Fred took them hurriedly and tore off the wrapper of the paper. It was a Purple, two weeks old, but what mattered that? It brought him news of the place he loved and he scanned the columns eagerly. "Varsity getting in shape for Vandy," he read; "The Inn opens auspiciously," "Visitors now on the Mountain." He read the little publication through, devouring every word calling to mind the familiar names which he saw on the sheet. Classmates, friends, acquaintances, alumni,—all were flocking back and the Mountain was at its best. Oh! how he loved the place—every foot of it, every one of the fellows, every building.

The cook watched him narrowly and saw his face brighten and take on the old look and he realized that the other's heart was somewhere else.

That night Babe sang his strange songs louder and longer than usual to the cattle, while the men in camp listened to the cook laboriously spell out words from the paper which had come that day and they began to understand.

The next day "Babe," in spite of the protests and laments of the outfit, rode away to return no more, and two weeks later The Purple announced that "Fred Thomas, Captain of the Varsity Team," o—, had arrived on the Mountain for the summer."

The Knights of Old

SINCE gunpowder has proved the insufficiency of all defensive armor there has been a general tendency to glorify the ironclad nobles of the Dark Ages. The reason they were called dark ages was, there were so many knights. Why they have come into such favor is more than I can fathom. But they have, just the same. Why, even babies squall o' knights. Sensible men, whose only fault is their ability to move around and write poems, write of the knights making them gods. But that is poetic license.

The other day I called on a young lady who had just finished the tournament scene in "Ivanhoe." She was in raptures over the knights and their deeds. She expressed a wish that she could have lived in those ages, when the flash of armor met the gaze at every turn, and graveyards were more numerous than orphan asylums. But when I mentioned to her what a glorious game football was she was frantic with rage, and tried to talk so fast that she got blue in the face—where there was no rogue.

On the stage, the knights are portrayed in their false colors. There, all is brilliancy, the ironclads are most courteous to each other, and if they have to kill each other, they step out into the wings to do it, and all that is shown of the butchered man is his helmet with a papier mache head inside, and a tin sword. Things didn't go so smoothly in the days of chivalry. In the first place, only the higher class of people had any rights, and the only right they had was to get killed. The poor were either slaves or semi-slaves. What was not taken from the serf by taxes, was taken by rapine and pillage. He couldn't dig a hole in the ground without first getting permission from his liege lord. He had to have his bread baked in his lord's oven. The lord never had to buy bread. Everywhere, except among a few half starved, half crazed monks, ignorance reigned supreme. If you were to ask a lord whether he could read or write, you might have a fight on your hands. It would be safer to call him a liar, or a thief, or anything else, than to accuse him of not being ignorant.

And the armor didn't have such a brilliant appearance as depicted on the boards. It was rusty and tarnished, and the iron was smashed in pieces. Nor were the horses covered with such beautiful trappings of silk and satin and cloth of gold as the frontispieces of historical novels assert. They were not such "noble beasts," to quote from a poetical panegyric. They were simply ordinary, good-for-nothing, cross-eyed, lop-eared plugs, with a mile an hour gait, and their owners didn't have sense enough to know it. The knights themselves were not quite so courteous. They always carried a cord of chips on their shoulders, and their lances were ever ready to explore the insides of anybody they ran up against—sleeping men prefer red. Whenever a man went to sleep, he was liable to wake up and find himself killed. And it is not an exactly true statement that says the knights had such a store of honor. That they had some honor I won't deny, but it was shown only to their equals, and not to them if there was any chance of getting out of it. When chaperons were around, the ladies were also treated with courtesy.

The everyday life of those old knights was killing and getting killed. To give a practical illustration, suppose yourself to be encased in scrap-iron from head to foot, and jolting along on a plug whose every motion made the scrap-iron sound like a boiler factory in full blast. Suppose yourself to be thinking of your mistress' left eyebrow, or of her tiny shoes—a foot long—when all of a sudden a voice that sounds like a buzz saw, a hand organ and a mellow tom-cat going at once, yells out, "Good Sir Knight, will ye joust?" And away you go, hammer and tongs, until the one or both of you are killed. This was the state of affairs all the time. Never was a man's life safe. He couldn't make an engagement a week ahead without being in danger of breaking it on account of somebody's ax having broken him. But I can't understand how a knight ever got hurt. To describe the clothes worn by each full fledged butcher with the title of Lord: First, he would put on an entire suit of mail—the people in those days were as careful about their mail as they are at present; then he would don greaves, leg-pieces, thigh-pieces, arm-pieces, shoulder-pieces, breast-pieces, and back-pieces, and any other pieces that came handy. His saddle was of solid steel, and came almost to his neck—making an excellent protection. There is one curious thing I have noticed about this old-time armor—it was thickest in the back. And how these valiant men were thrown from their saddles is another puzzler. As I said before, they were of great height, and being curved to the shape of the body, a person could sit as snug within one as if he were in another suit of armor. Of course, the horse might be thrown on his haunches and spill him. That was about the only way he could be unhorsed.

According to the poets and historical novels, the jousts were glorious sights, with their dead knights, squirming horses, and pools of blood. But I am not quite so sure they were. No doubt it was a glorious sight to see a man get a hole punched in him big enough for a dog to walk through. But still I am doubtful on the point. The ladies who graced the journey were interested in seeing a man done up in that fashion, but not so the man himself. He was well bored.

In the days of chivalry, every iron-clad avenged his own wrongs, and with the sword's point. If one slasher were to outdo another in the affections of a certain scantily clad lady, he would hang around the corner some dark night, and the first thing the favored suitor would know he would get it in the neck. That is, if he were the weaker. You never would catch a weak knight fooling around a strong one. No, sir; he would walk three blocks to avoid him. That was the way it was with Launcelot and a few other licenced murderers. They had a mighty big reputation, and nobody had nerve enough to tackle them.

When you come to think of it, these knights were a lot of lumbering, asinine fools. They would persist in getting off to a little distance and charging at each other and getting killed. That was all right, but to waste so much horse-flesh was a sin and a shame. They would go off into some secluded spot and write bad verses on, and sigh for their lady-loves, inststead of havnig snap enough to call on them. A "damosel fair"—of course the reader will understand that I don't mean that she really was fair; I am just quoting from the poets—would tell an iron-clad about some castle off somewhere—she didn't know where—together with its inmates, having been changed into an old-shoe, and straightway he would look over his mail, take her with him as guide, without a thought of the scandal that would be raised, and hunt for the shoe. Armor was mighty convenient to have along on such a camping trip. The breast-plate made a splendid fryingpan, and when it came to a soup pot, the helmet was it, and was fitted with a long handle. Gauntlets made excellent glasses, and the leg and arm pieces were especially designed to serve as stove-pipes for an impromptu stove. The shoes were used as small pots, to boil rice, oatmeal, etc. The sword was the spit and the visor the broiler.

I have a friend who takes a keen interest in old armor. Not, however, in a political way. He has more sense. He is busy designing a good, substantial suit of armor for use on the football fields. I have no doubt but that in the near future the following advertisement will be seen in Spalding's catalogue:

"Best blued-steel, Eureka football armor, consisting of helmet, breast-and-back-plates, arm-pieces, gauntlets, leg-pieces, and ax, and a few other extras. Spike on helmet is one foot long. This attachment will be found to be especially convenient in centre and tackle-over-tackle plays, although the ends will also appreciate its value in drilling a hole through an opponent. Breast-and-back-plates have been thoroughly tested with dynamite before leaving factory, and are warranted puncture proof. Shoes are of solid steel, welded by the most approved method, and are provided with cleats one inch in length. The leading football players in the country are using these suits, and find that with them on they can kill their opponents with very little exertion and less personal danger. Always give chest measure and length of inseam when ordering, and state whether you want a 16, 24, or 30-lb. ax. Price, $30.00 f.o.b. Furnished in any colors, $5.00 extra."

Of course, I don't mean to say that the knights had no good points. But they were so small that you would need a microscope to see them. They civilized to some extent the countries in which they killed and got killed. That is, they did so as a class. But, individually, the knights were only fit to make love and do stunts in tournaments, as circusses were then called. In their choice of lovers, the ladies were quiet original. They didn't let themselves be ruled by such a paltry thing as love. Oh, no! not they! They would "keep company" with the strongest knight, and just as soon as he was whipped, they would desert to the side of the whipper. It didn't matter if he had a few following him around already. The more men he had killed the more guides he would have to show him the way to old shoes.

To get a good idea of the outward appearance of a knight, go to the circus or theater, where actors in tin armor strut around, and talk big, and curl their mustaches, and play the hero generally. To get an idea of his language and pet cuss words, go to the historical novel. But there is no source from which you may form an idea of him mentally. Imagine a conceited fop, a bully, and an idiot, and you have the right combination.

The Count and the Domino

A'M'SELLE does not dance so well to-night."

"No, I have never seen her so stupid. She will soon be passé de mode, if she falls off like this."

Such was the censure cast upon the Red Domino, who had been the recognized dansuse première at the Théâtre des Variétés for the past season. Clearly she was at her worst on this the night of nights (it was La Nuit du Grand Prix.) Le Domino Rouge, whose name was unknown and whose face no one had seen—if the shapely chin and pearly teeth be excepted—had been the sustenance of the programme during the season. No prima donna since Lazaro had been paid such unrelenting homage or had so great a coterie of admirers. Charming and graceful as mademoiselle was, surely to-night she was as awkward and clumsy as any ouvrière. Ma'm'selle was ill or drunk or carelessly indifferent to her work. At any rate the audience was disgusted, the management furious, and the prima donna impudently indifferent. On the night above referred to, le Comte d'Armand was lunching in the Café des Armes, in one of the private dining-rooms apportioned off for the sumptuous rich who preferred to dine à seul or as it oftener happened à deux. The Red Domino in a long cloak and heavily veiled, had entered the apartment with him. Having removed her veil, shenow sat opposite him dressed in a low cut evening gown of rich red Flemish silk encrusted with jewels. Her dainty pink-nailed fingers were a blaze of costly gems. But covering her eyes and the upper portion of her face was the habitual domino of red voile.

"Ah! Mademoiselle you are gorgeous to-night. Those hands, that figure, those teeth! You are enough to drive a poor Parisian to madness. But tell me, to what kind intervention of Fate I am able to claim this tête-à-tête my own? How did you manage to cancel your engagement at the theatre to-night? They depend on you as the chief drawing-card of the programme."

"Ah, Monsieur, I very cleverly fell in, and was skillful enough to fool the doctor. They have a couple of Arabian dancers in my place who will no doubt give better satisfaction than I." "Mademoiselle deceives herself as she well knows. Without Le Domino Rouge Paris would soon grow blasé," answered the Count, a smile playing around his thin lips.

The prima donna lit a "Monopol" and leaned gracefully back in her chair. "Did you have the wine brought in, Monsieur le Comte? For you know it must not be known that Le Domino Rouge is dining with Comte d'Armand, when her physician forbade her to leave her bed. Should M. Pietro get word of it Ma'm'selle might fare badly."

"But I can assure Ma'm'selle that no one shall know I had the pleasure of so charming a hostess," replied the Count.

M. le Comte was not experienced in uncorking his own wine, nevertheless they soon had two glasses of champagne sparkling before them. One glass followed another in rapid succession, and the eyes of the Count shone under the influence of the intoxicant.

"Ma belle Mignonne," cried d'Armand in a thick voice, "Why do you hide so much loveliness under that everlasting domino? Come, let me take one peep into those eyes. They are a glorious brown. I know they are—allons, I must see them!"

"Non, non, Monsieur le Comte, no one shall see them until La Fête, the last night of the opera. I am now the mystery and wonderment of Paris. How many say, 'Le Domino Rouge has some secret. Why does Ma'm'selle wear the domino—the eternal domino?' Sapristi! Voilà my originality—my mystery—the magic of my charm. Voilà mon tout" and she sipped the last of her wine.

Several empty bottles now lay upon the table and floor. Mademoiselle, her head thrown back in a delectable attitude, puffed coils of blue smoke ceilingward and sipped of her champagne. The Count, intoxicated and unsteady, gained his feet and staggered towards the woman. "So, so, ma fillette! And no one shall see those eyes—those brown eyes—hein? Voyons! I shall see 'em and kiss 'em too." He launched forward as if to tear the cloth from her face, but she threw him away from her.

"Does Monsieur forget that the waiters are outside? If he try that again I shall call for them."

D'Armand sank into a chair, too far under the influence of the wine to do more than stare blankly at the actress.

The Domino became once more smiling. Seating herself on the arm of the Count's chair, she began to pass her fingers through his hair. At the first stroke, d'Armand seized her bejeweled hand and drew her down until their lips met.

"Now that Monsieur is more reasonable," she began, "I shall bargain with him. You think I have brown eyes—oui, I have; you think them glorious—other of the nobility have so said, long before I became la danseuse première.

"If you still wish to see them—to kiss them, I'll let you bargain for them. Here," and she opened a bottle of champagne, "drink to my eyes—my glorious brown eyes!—Again!—Again!"

D'Armand drank, his glass fell to the floor.

"Monsieur seems fatigued; come, what say you to my bargain? What will you give to see Le Domino Rouge without her domino! Hein, what will Monsieur give?"

The Count looked at her, his eyes besotted and vacant. Drawing a bank-book from his pocket, he handed it to her and replied: "Let Ma'm'selle state her figure."

"Well, M. le Comte what say you to the petit sum of a hundred francs: Am I too exorbitant? What says Monsieur?"

"Mon Dieu, ma belle values herself too little. Let us say two hundred. Voici—write out the check—my hand is unsteady."

The actress seated herself at the table and wrote out the check, for two hundred?—ah no! Mademoiselle was too clever for that—"Whom is this check to be on, Monsieur?"

"M. Cotier, the proprietor will honor it. Here let me sign it." D'Armand caught the pen and scrawled his name across the foot of the check. "Now, ma reine, let me kiss those eyes! Venez ma petite!"

"Monsieur forgets that I have not the money yet. Let us ring for un garçon. Here," and she handed the check to the waiter. "The Count wishes this honored immediately," and she closed the door.

The garçon soon returned with the bills which Mademoiselle slipped into her cloak.

"And now, Monsieur le Comte, Le Domino Rouge will uphold her part of the bargain; Voilà!" and she tore the mask from her face. No doubt it were worth two hundred francs.

"Well ma sœur, and what thought they of you at the Theatre?" asked the Red Domino, with a whimsical smile, "Le Domino Rouge was not at her best, eh?"

"Ah, Francois," replied her sister, "they looked surprised then disgusted; M. Pietro was irascible and threatened me, by the thousand devils, that if I was as stupid again he would discharge me. I said nothing but left immediately my dance was over."

"Never mind, Marie, here are a thousand francs as a recompense. I shall appear at my best to-morrow night, and tell M. Pietro that I was very ill. Venons, here is your thousand."

"Merci, but how did you play the count?"

"Ah, cela est facile à dire! I told him I had plead illness, and broken my engagement for the night. After he was well gone in champagne, I offered to remove my mask for a hundred francs. He offered me two hundred, and bade me write out the check. Francois never lets an opportunity slip, so—Voici! les cinquante mille francs!" and she tossed away an unlighted cigarette.

"But, ma sœur, will not M. le Comte report to the gendarmes when he finds himself deprived of so many francs?"

"Non, non, that is the part you so cleverly played, ma Marie. Did not Paris see Le Domino Rouge on the night when Monsieur was robbed? Paris will not believe le Comte. Non, Le Domino Rouge was at the Théâtre des Variétés, and le Comte d'Armand is either drunk or crazy. N'est ce pas, ma sœur?"

Drinking Song

Fill up the bowl again, my boys,
 Let Care and Grief take flight;
 We'll only let the best of joys
 Possess our hearts to-night.
 Forget thy care and sorrow, friend,
 Drown out the Future's voice;
 We'll think not of to-morrow, friend,
 So let thy heart rejoice.

Lift up thine glass of wine, my lad,
 That sparkles as the sea,
 "We'll drink to Auld Lang Syne," my lad,
 To days of jollity.
 So every mother's son of us
 Must dwell but with to-night;
 Let every single one of us
 Make mirth and cheer more bright.

CHORUS

Our Alma Mater, tried and true,
 How oft we've dreamed of thee;
 Thy skies seemed always clear and blue,
 Thy life from care e'er free.
 Sewance! Our whole hearts shall beat
 For thee and thee alone,
 And Life shall seem as incomplete
 When from thee we have gone.

Life

Quoth a youth, from the Founts of Wisdom
 Late returned in pride and glory,
 To his master, old and hoary;
 "Canst thou tell me what is Life?"
 Softly sighed the old preceptor,
 Turned his mind to gentle musing,
 Threads of fancy slow unclosing
 From the silent Loom of Life:

"Learn my son, that life is endless,
 Life, a bubble filled with sorrow,
 Doomed to burst upon the morrow;
 Yet a sorrow mixed with joy.
 We, the atoms close commingling,
 In this light and airy bubble
 Of embittered, dreary trouble;
 We, a part of lonely Life,
 Yet to live with glad obedience,
 Turn not ears in deaf unheeding,
 To those men our patience needing,
 Brother atoms in our Life."

Then the youth instilled with virtue,
 Turned his steps and mounted higher;
 Wrote his name in living fire
 Deep upon the walls of fame.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGGINS KILLED,

AWFUL WRECK BRIDGE FALLS

Last night, while a party of laborers were returning from Lost Cove, in the total darkness, save for the gleam of consciousness emanating from each individual mind, the bridge which crosses a creek three miles from the city, gave way just as the party was about to step on it, and precipitated the dog of the foreman into the icy water where it struggled in three inches of mud until a handkerchief could be obtained to wipe its feet.

HORRORS OF DRINK HABIT

Even when things seem most auspicious, the hand of Providence comes in with mighty tread and shatters the fond hopes of an admiring populace.

When the inmates of Hoffman went to eat their soup at dinner yesterday, a fly was found carefully concealed beneath a piece of luscious tomato. Had not the insect been discovered by the eagle eye of McCraven, who knows but what dire results might have resulted to those drinking the soup.

Let us always be observant, and learn from this narrow escape, that the victory is sometimes to the slow.

PANTS CAME OFF

While Dr. Samuel Barton was returning from the village yesterday afternoon, a most dreadful accident befell him. He was riding horseback, and had just arrived in front of the hotel, where everyone was out on the porch, when a pair of pants he was carrying in his hand, fell to the ground.

EDITORIAL NOTE

Many contributions were received which were found unavailable for this issue. Some were voluntary and some seemed to be involuntary—that is, evolved at a great expenditure of energy and during great suffering. Some of them may be published later, but it will only be because the office "devil" gets the wrong copy.

LOONEY LITERATURE

Conglomerate day, that hallucination swept from darkest night. That all unconscious lay absolved. Continue thou this too uncanny part of darkened despotism. What means a noxious concantation of adaptability. What men when so disposed could fair resist alleviation of this sundry coil. Who, when they knew not why 'twas so; said lead us onward that we may unfold the mysteries of a transient thought so intermingled with ethereal sentiment. And guarded well their hermitage from earthly care and premonition. The Huns! The Huns! God wot that they may never die.

SPORTING NEWS

In the annual indoor track meet held last night, Capt. S. M. Bartoa, of the locals, established a new facultatic record for the high jump, clearing two spools of thread with comparative ease. Barton will represent us at the Olympian games next year.

Contrary to local dope, Roszel's bunch of frisky youngsters made a poor showing in their annual La-Crosse match with the dusky lads of Tuskegee. Washington (not G. W.) outplayed Roszel, our forlorn hope, at every stage of the game. While we had not anticipated a victory by a large margin, still we thought the Covites would put up a better game.

WOMAN'S DEPT

We have inaugurated this department of THE SPUREE because we feel that women should have a voice in everything. We feel that their opinion should be heard. We feel that they exert an influence which is incalculable and should have some outlet. But these sentiments only spring from a knowledge that, no matter what we did, or said, or prayed; the condition would still exist. Woman, we throw this department open to you.

Here is a letter we recently received from a lady in Paris, Kentucky: "DEAR EDITOR—I wish you would give me a receipt for arranging my hair in a "figure 8." Now, in the name of heaven, what does the editorial staff of this glorious publication know about arranging the hair? We can arrange our own, in fact, we have done so at irregular intervals; but how to arrange it in a figure 8, we know not. We would suggest, however, that it be divided into four parts and then doubled.

Here is another. "MY DEAR EDITOR—My husband never comes in before three o'clock in the morning.

What shall I do?" What shall we do? If we advise the lady to beat him with a rolling-pin, he will sue us for damages, and if we advise her to be good to him and try to win him from his wicked ways by kindness, she will come in and tear up the office. Now we are very proud of our office as we have just installed a new lap-robe for the editorial cat to sleep upon, so we do not wish to have it mutilated. I think we will occupy a middle ground and refuse suggestions.

In all the smart gowns this season, pink beleros are being worn over crepe-de-chine gimps. This gives a very "chic" appearance to the creation and in no way interferes with the artistic lingerie worn around the collar. Hats are about the same as usual, but cost more. Shoes have box pleats down the fromage de brie and are worn considerable lower. Full length gloves will be worn. Stockings will be worn. Petticoats will be worn. In fact, a great many things will be worn.

POLITICS

THE SPUREE is, and of right ought to be, opposed to Trusts of any character. We trusted a man two years ago for a year's subscription and up to the present time he has done nothing but criticise the paper. While we do not bear him any malice, still, if we had him here we would take one shot at his ungrateful carcass. LET HIM
TO WHOM THIS APPLIES STAND FORWARD.

The University of the South

Sewanee, Tennessee

THE UNIVERSITY is under the joint control of eighteen dioceses of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Opened in 1868. Located at Sewanee, Tennessee, on the Cumberland Mountains, two thousand feet above the level of the sea, and about one thousand feet above the surrounding valleys. The scenery is beautiful, the climate is salubrious, and the inhabitants are especially exempt from malarial and pulmonary complaints. Sewanee has a national reputation as a health resort. The atmosphere, even in the hot season, is delightful and well adapted to the requirements of a Summer School. The following departments of the University are well equipped and fully organized with a thoroughly efficient corps of professors:

Academic, Theological, Medical, Law, Pharmaceutical, Engineering

While Sewanee's claim to stand for training in classical and literary culture is justified by the large number of alumni who have attained to prominence in journalism and literature, many are successful in business, and several are engaged in the practice of architecture.

Through the generosity of a beneficiary, an offer has been made for the building of a $60,000 Science Hall, which when completed and properly equipped, will fill a long-felt need in the broader growth of the University.

The Sewanee Grammar School prepares boys for this and other Universities and for business.

Trinity Term, 1907, begins July 5th; Advent Term, 1907, begins September 19th; Lent Term, 1908, begins March 19th. Vacation from the middle of December to the middle of March, instead of during the summer months.

Vice-Chancellor.

The University Press

OF SEWANEE TENNESSEE

THE UNIVERSITY PRESS was established in May, 1904, as a place where scholarly printing could be done in a manner harmonious with the tastes of scholarly men of artistic appreciation. A new and perfectly adapted building was erected, housing a plant well equipped and suited to executing the class of work contemplated. The plant consists of three power presses and a type-setting machine, with other necessary machinery, and a large assortment of type.

THE PRESS stands as a protest against the fads of modern type design. It seeks for simplicity and dignity in the use of type letters, and employs ornament only in harmony with and subordinate to the text illustrated or decorated. It is one of the offices of the typographer to give an added grace to the written message by an intelligent utilization of the principles of appropriateness in the type composition. The thought or idea to be communicated acquires or loses force, directness, clearness or lucidity, or beauty, in proportion to the fitness of the typography employed as a medium. The workers at THE PRESS have made a careful study of these principles, and keenly appreciate the need for the judicious assembling of types for pleasing and harmonious effects. The Printing Art, the scholarly magazine of the craft, has recognized this, on several occasions, by awards in its competitions and otherwise.

The establishment of THE PRESS seems to be a fulfillment of the dream of the founder of the University, Bishop Polk. His son, Dr. William M. Polk, of New York, has made the following allusion in his "Memoirs": "In time it was expected that presses would be established, from which a native literature should be issued. In short, the University Domain was to be fitted and prepared for a home of all the arts and sciences and of liberal culture in the Southern States." In its spirit and aims, however, like the University itself, THE PRESS would not remain provincial, but seeks to make its appeal to the lovers of art in printing and in the making of books wherever they may be found.

In addition to the making of books and educational and ecclesiastical printing, we design Book-plates in etchings for those who like to identify their books by a label specially designed for their use. We can print these designs on either bond, Japan or India paper, and shall be glad to make known the possibilities and prices.

Feeling a measure of confidence in its ability to give entire satisfaction to the most discriminating, THE PRESS solicits correspondence and requests for estimates on any printing worth being done well, and will gladly submit specimens of work it has already executed.

Fairmount School for Girls

A SUMMER SCHOOL

MONTEAGLE, TENNESSEE

FAIRMOUNT is a home school for girls, delightfully situated on a spacious domain in the mountains of Tennessee, at an elevation of some 2000 feet above the level of the sea. By reason of the cool and invigorating climate of this plateau, the school is enabled to continue in full session through Spring, Summer and Autumn, with only a short recess between terms, in August; while the "long vacation" falls in the Winter, from Christmas to the end of March.

FAIRMOUNT represents a serious effort to furnish to a limited number of selected students, thorough individual instruction, based upon personal contact and sympathy, in an atmosphere of Christian culture and refinement, amid congenial surroundings and under most healthful conditions. To the success of this effort the unique and delightful system of Summer term and Winter vacation has largely contributed. The number of places is limited, and those applying for admission must be introduced to the Principal. Pupils are expected to be in attendance on the opening days in March or August.

The Illustrated Circular will be sent to any address on application to FAIRMOUNT SCHOOL, Monteagle, Tennessee.

Do you know that ninety-five out of every hundred men in this country to-day find a pressing need for Life Insurance at least once in their lives?

Is it more likely that you will be among the ninety-five who need it or among the five who don't? Remember, the chances are 19 to 1.

Do you know that, of those who apply for Life Insurance, needing it badly, quite a number find that they have waited until they are unfit physically?

Do you know that still more men find that they have waited so long that their age makes Life Insurance too expensive to buy, even though it has become a positive necessity?

Do you realize that the above facts prove the wisdom of taking Life Insurance while you are young and can get it at slight expense?

An Aetna Policy is best because it's cheapest, and cheapest because it's best.
